CHAPTER ONE

INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background of the organization

Debre tabor university is found in Debre tabor town in North central Ethiopia 666km far from Addis Ababa and about 50km east of lake tana. The university was founded in 2001

E.C on the area cover 126-hectare land and its learning and teaching process was started in woreda agricultural college in 2003 E.C. Next to this its constant learning and teaching process was again started in main campus in 2004 E.C. Currently in internal quality of education is the first and an outstanding university from the third generation university in Ethiopia.

1.1.1. Mission

Debre tabor university aspires to generate self-reliant, competent, and problem solving, research oriented and transformation agents, who can actively participate in the teaching and learning, research doing and community service that basically enhance the technological advancement of the society as a whole.

1.1.2. VISSION

Debre tabor university tried to hard to become one of the icon of quality education and nationwide reputable universities of Ethiopia in 2020.

1.1.3 Slogan of Debre tabor university

Debre tabor university has ahistorical duty to answer Tewodroses quest for knowledge.

1.2Background of the Study,

Recruitment, selection and placement process is one of the most important and complicated functions which contributes toward the smooth and efficient functioning of the organization. Better recruitment, selection and placement strategies result in improved organizational out comes, the more effectively organizations recruit and select candidates, the more likely they are to hire and return satisfied employees. Proper recruitment, selection and placement practices getting the right people in the right place at the time doing the right job is an essential element of recruitment and selection process in organizations. (Numbudiri,2011).

The growth and complexity of the organizations are increasing from time to time effective human resource planning, employee recruiting and selecting process should be carefully analyze in advance that to days before. (Calydon,2004).

. Recruitment of different kinds of people may be the most important issue. When the organization plans to move in to new and potentially more profitable businesses or seeks closer associations with suppliers, competitors or distributors. The reason is that new talents will be needed to manage businesses or deal with concerns of suppliers and other organizations (Kazarias, 2013).

The importance of ensuring the selection of the right people to join the work force has become increasingly apparent as the emphasis on people as the prime source of competitive advantage has grown. The contribution of effective recruitment and selection to enhanced business performance is also illustrated by the findings of empirical studies (Holden, 2001).

The role of human resource recruitment is to build a pool of potential new hires that the organization can draw on if the need arises. In human resource management recruiting consists of any practice or activity carried on by the organization with the primary purpose of identifying and attracting potential employees. Selection begins with the candidates identified through recruitment and attempts to reduce their number to the individuals best qualified to perform the available job. Through personnel selection organizations make decisions about who will not be allowed to join the organization. (Neo, 2004)

According to Bratton and Gold (2007, 239) the process of putting the right people in the right time is one of the most critical tasks any organization faces. The quality of work performed can be only as high as the capabilities of the people performing it. Generally, in Ethiopia different organizations apply recruitment; selection and placement of human resource are a common practice in old or in newly established organizations.

1.3. Statement of the Problem

Recruitment, selection and placement are key functions within any organization. In this study the researchers will be study the assessment of recruitment, selection and placement process in Debre Tabor University on Human Resource Management Office. The aim shall be to ensure that the organization recruits and retains staffs that possess the necessary skills, aptitudes and adaptability to enable the organization to meet its objectives (Griffin, 2006).

But there are some problems face to follow the procedures of recruitment, selection and placement. Those problems include; brain drain, scarcity of skills and expertise in the labor market, cost associated with recruitment, selection and placement smaller companies compute with bigger companies which can better absorb the costs associated with recruitment and are also capable of playing better salaries, lack of human resource planning, geographical location of jobs and use of information technology in advertising. These problems lead to a lack of transparency in the recruitment process and untrustworthiness of employees involved with external and internal recruitment. The other problem of recruitment, selection placement is some of the employees who are not able to improve and adjust to their new working environment leading to employee turnover and this affects the organizations interims of efficiency and effectiveness (Zinyemba, 2014).

As we have seen above different organization faced with a number of problems to effectively and efficiently recruit and select the appropriate employees. Based on this problem the researchers wanted to assess the challenges of employees' recruitment, selection and placement practice in Debre Tabor University.

1.4. Research Questions

1. What type of policy and principle of employee recruitment, selection and placement practice mostly applying currently in Debre Tabor University?
 2. What are the problems that affect the organizations recruitment, selection and placement process?
 3. What are the organizational conditions influence employees calling and applying for the job?

1.5. Objectives of the Study

1.5.1. The General objective of this study is

The general objective of the study will be assessment of the challenges recruitment, selection placement process of Debre Tabor University Human Resource Management Office.

1.5.2. Specific objective of the study

The following are the specific objectives that the researcher wants to address

- ❖ To identify the policies and principles of recruitment, selection and placement of employees currently apply in Debre tabor university.
- ❖ To identify the problems, relate to recruitment, selection and placement in Debre tabor University.
- ❖ To assess the organizational conditions influencing employees calling and applying for the job in the University.

1.6. Significances of the study

After the completion of this research paper, the organization will be benefit from the conclusion and recommendation to correct their errors. Using the given recommendations and conclusions the organization will be able to correct practical mistake or will take remedial solution for the problems. The study will help to give or shows the way for other researchers who need to study in the area of recruitment, selection and placement. And it will be providing source for other potential researchers. In addition to this other researcher as he/she can take this study as a reference for conducting other research. Finally, it will be help the researchers to acquire more knowledge in conducting research that relate to theory and practice. It will be also helps the researchers to relate theoretical knowledge with environment and the researchers to broaden their knowledge and understanding of recruitment, selection and placement practice.

1.7. Scope of the Study

The scope of the study will be encircled with different constraints and limited on the range of geographically, conceptually and theoretically of the researcher knowledge.

Geographically, the study is not covering large areas because of different constraints limiting it and the study geographically limited to Debre tabor university. It does not cover at the woreda level hospital and other organizations which are formerly administer in this university, because of constraints of time and money.

Conceptually, the study is conceptually focused on recruitment, selection and placement in Debre tabor university in human resource management office.

Theoretically, Recruitment, selection and placement is one of the most human resource management practice which used to hire employees.

1.8 Limitation of the study

- ❖ As the scope of the study delimit geographically in Debre Tabor University, the study is difficult to generalize other areas.
- ❖ As the scope of the study delimit conceptually with only recruitment, selection and placement practice of the university, the study is impossible to deal about other tittles.

1.9. Organization of the Paper

The paper consisting of five chapters which all are the main bodies of the paper those are, Chapter one includes; back ground of the study, statement of the problem objective of the study significance of the study scope of the study. Chapter Two; Review of Related Literature. Chapter three includes; research methodology, research design, target population, sampling design and technique, source of data collection chapter four data analysis and interpretation chapter five conclusions and recommendation.

Review of Related Literature

2.1. Definition

Human resource planning is a highly complex area of work and requires specialized skills. However, it is linked very closely to the supply and demand of labor with the purpose of bringing about equilibrium of man power within an organization (Armstrong, 2001, p19). Human resource planning is the process of analyzing and identifying the need for and availability of human resources so that the organization can meet its objective (Robert L. Mathis and John H. Jackson; 1997 p38).

The approach to man power planning needs to be flexible due to this plan can be developed as time and situation dictate. This requires analytical and diagnostic skills from the planner who attempt traditionally to seek to calculate man power needs in the short, medium and long term. The term recruitment, selection and placements will generate goals of applicants who desire to be selecting (Gerard, 2006). The responsibility of recruitment, selection and placement, as in all good human resource practices, is shared between line management and the personnel function. The personnel function (Cowling and Mailer; 1992: p-41).

According to (John M. Ivancevich and William F. Gluck 1989 p186) the major human resource activities are: -

- Human resource planning
- Equal employment opportunity
- Job analysis
- The staffing process (Recruitment, selection and placement)
- Performance evaluation
- Training and development
- Career planning and development
- Compensation
- Benefits and services
- Safety and health

2.2 Method of Recruitment Selection and Placement

Unlike many other topics in the human resource Management are number of studies and considerable bodies of knowledge of recruitment, selection and placement, Review of the better known classic studies can help set the stage for traditional and modern theories of recruitment, selection and placement (John M. Ivancevich and William F. Glueck 1989; P186).

The staffing process putting the right people in the right position at right time is one of the most critical tasks in any organization faces. The quality of the work performed can be only as high as the capabilities of the people performing it. The Three initial stages in the staffing process of an organization are recruitment, selection and placement (Tim Elaydon, 2004).

2.3 Recruitment

Recruitment is the first in the hiring process. The goal is to attract qualified people whose skills and experience meet the demands of the job you want to fill. Once you have an initial pool of qualified people, you can use interviewing and references to screen for other desirable qualities. The process of finding and attracting capable applicant for employment, the process begins with new employees are sought and ends when their applications are submitted. The result is a pool of applicants from which new employees are selected (Werther and Davis 2009 P-195)

Different authors have defined the term recruitment at different manners, but the essence of their general understanding is the same. It is the process to obtain employees who have the abilities and attitude desired by the organization. To obtain these employees the organization focused on finding skilled man power, because the success and failure of the organization depends on its work force. Among any other resources human resource is the most important and determinant resource of organization (A Wilkson and T Redman, 2008).

2.4 Sources of Recruitment

According to (Noe et al. 2009) there are two source of recruitment thus are internal and external.

2.4.1 Internal sources recruitment

Search for suitable candidates to fill a confirmed vacancy will be beginning within the organization. This practice is good for morale, assures employees of avenues for promotion, and ensures that existing talent is not overlooked (Cowling and Mailer; 1992: PP-43).

According to Anthony, Perrewé and Kacmar (1993; p-276) finding qualified applicants in the organization is the main goal of the internal recruiting effort, there are several methods for locating these applicants. Among the most common are job posting referrals and skill inventories.

➤ Job Posting

It involves announcing job opening to all current employees. Bulletin board notices or printed bulletins can be used for this purpose. The announcement carries information about the nature of the position and the qualification needed, and any employee who is interested may bid on the job that is, enter the competition for it. Job posting can help to ensure the minority workers and other disadvantaged groups become aware of opportunities to move up in the organization (Cowling and Mailer 1992 p.42).

➤ Employee Referrals

A reliable source of people to fill vacancies is composed of friends and family members of current employees. Employees can acquaint potential applicants with the advantages of a job with the company furnish letters of introduction, and encourage them to apply. These are external applicants coming from an internal information source. Utilizing this source is usually one of the most effective methods of recruiting because many qualified people can be reached at low cost. In an organization with numerous employees, this approach can develop quite large pool of potential employees to (Noe et al. 2009).

Another way to find applicants within the organization is through employee by other departments. Informal communications among managers can lead to the discovery that the best candidate for the job is at a different section of the firm. An excellent source of information is the current employee who may know someone who would be qualified and interested in the open position. The source of information is very low cost, yet can yield a number of good prospects. Employees usually have a clear understanding of what the job entails and what type of person would fit with the organization (W. French 1990.52)

➤ Skill Inventories

Many firms have developed skill inventories of their employees. Information on every employee's skills, educational background, work history, and other important factors is stored in a data base which can then be used to identify employees within the attributes needed for a particular job. (Glueck 1982).

❖ Advantages and Disadvantages of Internal Source

i. Advantages

1. A present employee is more likely to stay with the company than an external Candidate.
2. Better motivation of employees because their capabilities are considered and opportunities offered for promotion.
3. Internal recruitment is quicker and cheaper (cost effective option) than the external).
4. It shows that management of valued the existing employees and that attractive career development opportunities are available to them.
5. Internal recruitment is quicker and faster than external source
6. Internal candidates are more knowledgeable than new starters coming from other organizations about what exactly the job involves

ii. Disadvantages

1. Poor attitude among those employees are not selected.
 2. It will create a gap in the department from where the employee is taken.

3. Political fighting and create hostile environment.

2.4.2 External Sources recruitment

Many vacancies are filled from external sources; even when an internal candidate is transferred or promoted the final result is usually a vacancy elsewhere in the organization which has to be filled from outside. In support of (Graham and Benet 1992; P-189) external recruitment can be time consuming, expensive and uncertain though it is possible to reduce those disadvantages to some extent by forecast though and planning (Graham and Bennet 1992 p.173-211).

Having more applicants is also a problem to identify the required individuals. Therefore, the man power supply plan needs to contain a comprehensive summary of the market situation and the way it is likely to develop. Often an organization must take a more active and sound recruitment role. Some of the mean of finding suitable candidates according to Graham and Bennet (1992: P.173-211) are school and college recruiting, advertising employee exchange, employment agencies, unsolicited applicants or walk-ins or write-ins.

➤ School and college recruiting: -

For some organization the major sources of recruit will be universities and training institution as well as schools. Recruiting at high school or vocational schools is often the strategic approach adopted by organizations with position openings at the entry level or in internal training programs. Recruiting at the college level serves as a major source for acquiring managerial, professional and technical skills (Rao 2009 p102).

➤ Advertising

Newspapers, magazines, television and other print and broad cast media provide an excellent source for recruitment of employees. The main advantage if media advertising is that it reaches large number of people. Its disadvantage is that it cannot be narrowly focused, thus a large number of unqualified candidates will be attracted (Rashmi 2010 p26).

➤ Employee exchange

Employee exchange serves as an intermediary between the job seekers and Employers. It is important for employers to find suitable workers without much expense and the job seeker find the job easily.

➤ Employment agencies

There could be public or private employment agencies. These agencies have information on job seekers in term of qualifications, skills, interests, etc. and can be a good source of employment by organizations Public agencies are a major source of blue-collar and white-collar works while private agencies are important sources of clerical, white collar and managerial personnel. The main disadvantage of using such agencies seem to come from the fact that unemployment is still seen by many employing managers as a social stigma and indicative of poor work records. (Gomez 2003)

❖ Advantage and disadvantage of external sources

A. Advantages

- i) It helps to create a talent pool of potential candidate for the benefit of the organization.
- ii) It increases the pool of job seeking candidates at minimum cost.
- iii) It helps to identifying and preparing potential job applicants, who will be the appropriate candidate for the job.
- iv) Finally, it helps in increasing organization and individuals' effectiveness of various recruiting techniques for all type of job applicants.

B. Disadvantages

- i) It takes longer adjustment period to train external candidates.
- ii) It can take longer and cost more than hiring an external than internal source.
- iii) On the job behavior is not precisely known

2.5 Selection

Selection is the process of making a “hire” or “no hire” decision regarding each applicant for a job. The process typically involves determining the characteristics required for effective performance on the job and then measuring applicants on those characteristics. The characteristics required for effective job performance are typically based on job analysis which is systematic summary of job. Depending on the applicant's score on various tests and/or the impressions they have made in interviews, managers determine who will and will not be offered a job. The selection process often involves the establishment of cut scores: applicants who score below these levels are considered unacceptable (Sarma 2008, p96).

2.6 The Selection process

The selection process is a series of steps through which applicants pass. The process determines the candidates who are likely to be successful eliminate those likely to fail. Ultimately, the selection decisions must focus on performance related issues if the selection process is to contribute to the firm's success (Decenzo and Robbins 2009 p256).

According to [Decenzo and Robbin] the selection process services of specific steps used to decide which recruits should be hired. The process begins when recruits apply for employment and ends with the hiring decision. In the steps in between, the department and the hiring manager match the employment needs of the applicant and the organization.

It is viewed as a series of steps through which applicants are screened out by the organization. These steps are discussed below:

2.6.1 Preliminary screening

The selection process often begins with initial screening of applicants to eliminate those who obviously do not meet the positions requirements by asking straight forward questions. In this step a human resource management specialists or line managers usually spend a few movements with applicants in what is called preliminary screening.

2.6.2 Completion of Application form

The application form is a sheet or small booklet with blanks to be filled in by the applicants. Applicants who come to an employment office are asked to complete an application black after a screening interview. The data that could be gathered by the forms could be best predictors of future behavior patterns of the employee; it might include data on the person's demographic and attitudinal characteristics and previous work experience in a form that leads itself to psychometric evaluation and interpretation (Mody 2010 p128).

2.6.3 Employment tests

An employment test is a mechanism that attempts to measure certain characteristics of individuals, such as manual, dexterity, qualifications and potential for success. The testing applicants offers some advantages: test results seem to be objective, free from personal bias; and they are usually expressed numerically, so that they lend them selves to statistical analysis and thus can be validated. However, there is also disadvantage, selection test may accurately predict an applicant's ability to perform the job, be less successful in indicating the extent to which he individual will want to perform it. (Moody's 2010 p129)

2.6.4. Employment interview

Interviews can be used at several stages of the selection process. Employment interviews are part of almost all selection procedures. Although employment interview can be the least objective part of the process they are generally considered the most valuable.

2.6.5. Reference checks and Recommendations

Reference checks involve communicating with previous employers and others who can provide information about applicant. Applicants are asked to provide a list of references of past supervisors and others. The checks serve for two purposes: They verify (or contradict what the applicant has told the organization, and they produce supplemental information that can be very useful hiring decisions.

2.6.6. Medical /physical examination

As one of the final steps before the hiring decision, a physical examination may be conducted by a physician or nurse appointed by the organization. In some organizations the candidates fill out a health questionnaire, and only those with apparent problems are referred to a physician.

According to Decenzo and Robbin the reasons for such a requirement include:

- i) In case of later workers' compensation claims, physical conditions at the time of hiring should be known.
- ii) ring of those with services communicable disease.
- iii) It may be necessary to determine whether the applicant is physically capable of performing the job in question.

2.6.7 Placement employees.

Is the introduction of new employees to the organization, their work units, and their jobs. Employees receive orientation from their coworkers, and from the organization. The orientation received from coworkers is usually unplanned and unofficial, and it often provides the new employees with misleading and inaccurate information. This is one of the reasons the official orientation provided by the organization is so important. An effective orientation program has an immediate and lasting impact on the new employee and can make the difference between his or her success and failure (Decenzo and Robbin 2009)

After hiring the employee, the organization begins a formal orientation program. Regardless of the type of organization, orientation should usually be conducted at two distinct levels.

1. Organizational orientation: - presents topics of relevance and interest to all employees.
2. Departmental and job orientation: - describes topics that are unique to the new employees' specific department and job

2.7. Placement

Placement is the process of putting people into a certain position, who have been selected for the job. Once the letter of employment is given the next stage is to place the newly recruited staff into their area of specialization. The professional adult education then takes over to find out the area of the candidates' skill and knowledge can be suitable(Egunyomi,2000) stressed that what is critical is that newly recruited candidates should be objectively placed in order to get the desired outcome. Generally, recruitment, selection and placement are key function with any organization. the researcher conducted a study on recruitment selection and placement process, practices and tried to assess procedure of recruitment selection and placement in Debre tabor University in human resource management office.

CHAPTER THREE

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY AND DESIGN

3.1 Research Design

The research design will be through descriptive research design. Because of this descriptive research technique provide the event, situation and simply describe the information.

3.2 Research Methodology

Research methodology is a way to systemically solve the research problem through qualitative and quantitative approach. Qualitative approach to research methodology will be concerned with group interviews and quantitative research approach methodology will be concerned with data analysis in the form of number and mathematical operation.

3.3. Target Population

The population for this study will be the total employee is 90 who are working in Debre Tabor University those who are engaged in recruitment, Selection and placement process. From the above total population 4 employees are working in human resource management office, 5 faculty heads and 1 college head and 40 department deans 40 employees for each department.

3.4 Sample size and sampling technique

The researcher will be use census to conduct the study. Because the population is too small. The aims of choosing these techniques will be in order to make the more reliable and representative.

3.5 Source of data

To achieve the objective of the study the researchers will conduct by using both primary and secondary sources of data. Primary data will be collected from employees of the organization who are working in Debre tabor university human resource management office. The secondary data will be collected from published and unpublished material of the organization. So it is possible to obtain better and the representation of information obtained from primary and secondary source of data.

3.6. method of data collection

To accomplish this study, the researchers will use both primary and secondary sources of data collection. The researcher will use primary data such as open ended and closed ended questionnaires for 90 employees the organization and interviews for directorate of human resource management office. Secondary data will be collect from different source documents and written materials.

3.7 Method of data analysis and presentation

The data will gather through questionnaires and interviews are processed and analyzed by using descriptive method. Tools such as, tables and percentages are considered useful for analysis. After all information are computed data collection, data analysis and data processing, the result will present presentation of raw data for meaningful information. Though explaining the result in details, presenting the result using table and percentage theoretically explanation will use to make clear event. Finally, conclusions of the major findings will draw and recommend to the study.
