

Principles	Description
1. Division of labor	1. The more people specialize, the more efficiently they can perform the task.
2. Authority	2. Managers have the right and the authority to give order and to get things done.
3. Discipline	3. Members of an organization need to respect the rules and agreements that govern it.
4. Unity of command	4. Each employee should receive instructions about particular operations from only one person to avoid conflicting expectations and confusions.
5. Unity of direction	5. Managers should coordinate the efforts of employees working in projects. But one manager should be responsible for one employee's behavior.
6. Subordination	6. Subordination of individual interest to the common goods.
7. Remuneration	7. Pay for work done should be fair to both employee and employer.
8. Centralization	8. Managers should retain final responsibility but should also give their subordinates enough authority to their job properly.
9. Scalar chain	9. A single, uninterrupted line of authority should run rank to rank from top management to lowest position in the company.
10. Order	10. Materials and people should be at the right place at the right time.
11. Equity	11. Managers should be both free and friendly to their subordinates.
12. Stability and tenure of staff	12. High rate of employee turnover is not efficient.
13. Initiative	13. Subordinates should be given the freedom to formulate and carry on with their plans.
14. Esprit de corps	14. Promoting team spirit gives the organization sense of unity.
